Critical Resilience for Nurses Michael Traynor 2017-03-27 The nursing profession is under pressure. Financial demands, student debt, the target culture, political scrutiny in the wake of major care scandals and increasing workloads are all taking their toll on professional morale and performance. This timely book considers the meaning of resilience in this adverse context and explains why measures to preserve individual nurses' and students' well-being are flawed if they don't take into account wider political and organizational perspectives. Arguing that healthcare can be thought about and experienced differently, this book: provides a summary of the latest research on resilience, explaining its relevance and also limitations for nurses; considers debates about compassion and highlights the effects of policy agendas on nurse education and nursing work; re-evaluates nursing's professional identity, including where nursing has come from and the effects of class, gender and race on its powerbase; assesses the role of politics and social media, both in driving change and feeding resistance; and introduces the idea of critical resilience as a complete framework for resisting bullying and fostering survival and change in the nursing workforce. Direct, upbeat, at times provocative and witty, this agenda-setting book enables nurses to understand why they feel the way they do. It also lists what opportunities are available to them to change, resist and survive in what has become a complex, challenging – if still deeply rewarding – line of work.

Nmc Survival Guide Lucy La Zouche 2014-10-30 The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) is the UK regulatory body for nurses and midwives. Some 670,000 health professionals in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are currently registered with the NMC. In fact, you cannot practise as a nurse or midwife in the UK without being registered with the NMC. The NMC fitness to practise process is protracted and can be very stressful. Case Law plays a very important part in NMC hearings and, let's face it, the lawyers who are key players in the proceedings have no incentive to make this simple. The aim of this book is to provide a guide which will demystify the process and help nurses and midwives to get the best possible result even in the most difficult circumstances.

The Extreme Sport of Nursing While BLACK! S. D. Onyango 2021-08-06 Racism in the NHS and other organisations is still an ongoing issue that has been highlighted by the recent black lives matter movement as well as the COVID19 pandemic. It is also great that more and more people are coming out and being vocal about it and calling for change which in my opinion is way overdue. I am also encouraged by the younger generation who are coming up the ranks and calling out incidences of racism and inappropriate behaviour. While all this is good and looks like we are heading in the right direction with regards to stamping out racism within and without the NHS, we must not lose sight of the fact that there are colleagues who are living this sad reality at this moment any given day up and down the country with serious consequences for their lives, livelihoods, health and family life and it can be a very lonely and frustrating place to be in. The COVID19 pandemic and the Black Lives Matter movement have highlighted the issue of continued racism within the NHS and the wider work community. A number of recent studies have shown that black people still face alot of racism and job discrimination in the United Kingdom(U.K). Indeed a disproportionate number of Black, Asian and Minority Ethnic(BAME) nurses and midwives get referred to the Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) by their employers as opposed to their White counterparts, this is according to findings published by the NMC of their - Equality, Diversity and Inclusion research⁴ with the NMC not faring any better in dealing with racism within its organisation and in how it deals with the findings that a disproportionate amount of BAME nurses are referred to them under fitness to practice. It is disheartening and plainly unbelievable that in 2021 we are still talking about race and racism and that as a black nurse, indeed a black worker anywhere, i have to put in three times the effort, triple check my work and be in constant awareness of systems and regulations that in some instances solely exist to trip me up. It is frankly exhausting but until change comes and I would like to believe that it will come, we still have to be on our guard, double up and prove ourselves over and over again. In this unofficial guide, I aim to pass on some of the gems I have learned and have been passed on over the years in what I call the extreme sport of nursing while black, in the hope that it will help my fellow Black Nurses navigate their workplaces, maybe even the playing field a little bit while we wait for changes to take place within and without our workplaces. There are brilliant people out there who are voicing their concerns and shaking up the status quo. Silence is no longer an option. We must make our voices heard. Dr Maya Angelou sums it up beautifully in this quote below. "When you know you are of worth - not asking it but knowing it - you walk into a room with a particular power" - Dr Maya Angelou.
