CADCA Responds to Obama's Comments on Marijuana

CADCA is concerned that only a portion of what the President said during his interview has made headlines, when in fact the President expressed some serious concerns about marijuana legalization. CADCA believes that substance abuse is a public health concern and has wide-reaching negative effects on our young people and society. So we agree with President Obama's comment that marijuana use is a 'bad habit', a 'bad idea and a waste of time'.

We also echo the President's sentiment that the case for marijuana legalization is 'overstated' and will not solve the many social problems our society faces.

The President's remarks and comments carry significant impact. Therefore, at a time when national studies indicate that the majority of high school seniors don't view marijuana as harmful and marijuana use is trending upwards among teens, we ask that the President consider the wide body of research showing the harms of marijuana use on young people and use the bully pulpit to positively influence teens
